Emily

So sorry I missed the deadline...things have been crazy here. As you know we aren't able to comment on pending litigation. Thanks for reaching out.

Hi Alex and Ivor,

The Los Angeles Times filed this lawsuit today regarding public records it sought on security costs for out-of-state trips by Mayor Garcetti. I'm writing about it for a 5pm deadline today. Can you provide any comment on the lawsuit?

Many thanks,
Emily

Doesn't matter to me. Closest coffee spots are the Starbucks, Demitasse & Blue Bottle. I can meet you in front of HQ at 2:30 and we can walk to one of those. We also have Groundworks in our office cafeteria now if you prefer that (though I think they close by 3).

Coming back around again on this Internal Affairs data request. The original was sent on March 30th. It is now July 6th. I know this is beyond your control and it's on IA to respond, but I've now waited more than 3 months to give the department a chance to provide its own figures opposite what is in the possession of the California Department of Justice. I'm going to be moving forward with this piece in the next few weeks, so if LAPD is going to provide the requisite data (and want to be involved in the proper follow-up interviews), it's going to need to happen in the next few weeks.

Subject: Verifying Statistics / Requesting Interview for story on Internal Affairs Data

Good morning:

I am working on a story about sustained citizen complaints against peace officers in California, based off data reported to the California Department Of Justice. While I am relying on data obtained through a public records request with CALDOJ, and the data they provide is based on information directly reported by local agencies, I still wanted to check in and verify their numbers were not in dispute before proceeding. Please look at the below statistics and let me know if the LAPD disputes any of the following:

1. From 2004 to 2016, the LAPD received 33,417 citizen-generated complaints of non-criminal misconduct against its officers. The LAPD sustained 1,855 of those complaints, or roughly 5.5%
2. From 2004 to 2016, the LAPD received 4,631 citizen-generated complaints of misconduct that could rise to the level of a felony against its officers. The LAPD sustained 119 of those complaints, or roughly 2.57%
3. From 2004 to 2016, the LAPD received 4,791 citizen-generated complaints of misconduct that could rise to the level of a misdemeanor against its officers. The LAPD sustained 170 of those complaints, or roughly 3.55%

Based on the above statistics, I would also like to interview a commander in Internal Affairs or someone else within the agency with a background in investigating internal misconduct, so I can get a better understanding of the LAPD's mechanisms when it comes to policing its own. I'd want to know more about the department's complaint intake process, how (if at all) it differs from complaints generated within the agency, and discuss the findings above.

On average in the same time frame, law enforcement agencies in California sustained roughly 8.5% of all non-criminal misconduct complaints, 6.4% of all felony complaints and 12% of all misdemeanor complaints, meaning the LAPD seems to be sustaining complaints at a significantly lower percentage across the board. I would like to discuss the data discrepancy with LAPD officials, as well as how you think such numbers affect public trust. Given California's lack of transparency laws when it comes to officer discipline and Internal Affairs statistics -- as you know, the specific classifications of the above misconduct allegations are not public, i.e.: excessive force, false arrest, etc. are not public -- it is very difficult for the public to understand why or how police departments arrive at these internal decisions.

Thank You. I look forward to discussing this further.

Hi Trish,

Thank you, yes, it would be helpful to a stop-in space. We will have a downtown office at 5th and Spring, where I will be based, but there aren't many desks there, so most reporters will be in El Segundo.

Could I stop by sometime and take a look? We can discuss more details at that time.

By the way, have you tried the new cafeteria in the L.A. Times building? It's much more expensive without offering better food!

This office is very small and can be used as a "Stop In" location where you can write a story, catch up on your e-mail or charge your phone every so often, but it is not a space that can be occupied on a daily basis. This "Stop In" location is offered to all news reporters, but is not to be used as a personal office for extended periods.

Coming back around again on this Internal Affairs data request. The original was sent on March 30th. It is now July 6th. I know this is beyond your control and it's on IA to respond, but I've now waited more than 3 months to give the department a chance to provide its own figures opposite what is in the

Good morning:

I am working on a story about sustained citizen complaints against peace officers in California, based off data reported to the California Department Of Justice. While I am relying on data obtained through a public records request with CALDOJ, and the data they provide is based on information directly reported by local agencies, I still wanted to check in and verify their numbers were not in dispute before proceeding. Please look at the below statistics and let me know if the LAPD disputes any of the following:

1. From 2004 to 2016, the LAPD received 33,417 citizen-generated complaints of non-criminal misconduct against its officers. The LAPD sustained 1,855 of those complaints, or roughly 5.5%
2. From 2004 to 2016, the LAPD received 4,631 citizen-generated complaints of misconduct that could rise to the level of a felony against its officers. The LAPD sustained 119 of those complaints, or roughly 2.57%
3. From 2004 to 2016, the LAPD received 4,791 citizen-generated complaints of misconduct that could rise to the level of a misdemeanor against its officers. The LAPD sustained 170 of those complaints, or roughly 3.55%

Based on the above statistics, I would also like to interview a commander in Internal Affairs or someone else within the agency with a background in investigating internal misconduct, so I can get a better understanding of the LAPD's mechanisms when it comes to policing its own. I'd want to know more about the department's complaint intake process, how (if at all) it differs from complaints generated within the agency, and discuss the findings above.

On average in the same time frame, law enforcement agencies in California sustained roughly 8.5% of all non-criminal misconduct complaints, 6.4% of all felony complaints and 12% of all misdemeanor complaints, meaning the LAPD seems to be sustaining complaints at a significantly lower percentage across the board. I would like to discuss the data discrepancy with LAPD officials, as well as how you think such numbers affect public trust. Given California's lack of transparency laws when it comes to officer discipline and Internal Affairs statistics -- as you know, the specific classifications of the above misconduct allegations are not public, i.e.: excessive force, false arrest, etc. are not public -- it is very difficult for the public to understand why or how police departments arrive at these internal decisions.

Thank You. I look forward to discussing this further.

Hi Trish,

There's a press office on the first floor of PAB, correct? As we're moving to El Segundo, we're trying to tabulate the office space available in the agencies we cover. Our downtown bureau won't have many seats, so other options will be helpful.

I'm off the early part of this week. Would it be possible to see the space later this week or next week?

Hi Trish,

There's a press office on the first floor of PAB, correct? As we're moving to El Segundo, we're trying to tabulate the office space available in the agencies we cover. Our downtown bureau won't have many seats, so other options will be helpful.

I'm off the early part of this week. Would it be possible to see the space later this week or next week?

Wanted to know if someone could explain what is happening in this cell phone video that is making the rounds. Person who took it claims this happened around 7 a.m. near an Inglewood

Starbucks. It appears to show a large number officers pointing weapons at an unarmed woman in the street. Obviously there's a lot of context missing from the video, but it also appears the cruisers in the shot are LAPD. Inglewood Police have already denied any of their officers were involved.

If anyone can provide a summary of the incident and explain what happened here, that would be greatly appreciated.

Hey Trish:

I know you were tied up with those ICE protests this morning, but I'm trying to put the finishing touches on a story and could use your help.

We're looking at some changes to gang injunction policies around the state following the March federal court ruling that blocked LAPD from enforcing its injunctions. I'm not asking for your comment on the legal side of it, but we are curious if the LAPD has any position on how, if at all, the city's declined use of injunctions has effected crime in the city this year. (As you probably know, LAPD was barred from enforcing against the roughly 1,400 people still subject to injunction in the city after a federal court ruling that was part of the ACLU/YJC lawsuit against the city).

Aside from a general comment as to whether or not LAPD believes the injunctions have had an effect on crime, I was wondering if you could provide the most recently available COMSTAT data? I just wanted to take a peak at YTD violent crime & homicides, as I assume you guys also track the percentage of those thought to be gang-related.

Please let me know if any of this is doable. Thanks,

JQ
